"Died Game."

Detroit Free Frees.

It is morning on the prairie.

To the east is the rosy sunrise and the dim, far-away outline of a mountain range; to the north a shadowy line which may mean hills or timber; to the west and south a broad, level ocean of green grass which has no limit. It seems as level as a floor to the eye, but it is cut up with dry ravines and ditches, and there are share ridges and dithe and surlan.

The sun is warm, the air still, and every lone mess. One who faces that morning sun and feels the vastness of the prairie is lost in whimy of recognition and pleasure advances

whimy of recognition and pleasure advances straight upon his master.

Alono! Man and house are the only living creatures in sight. They are as much lost to the world as two grains of a und washing to and fro in the Atlantic. The master's hand steals up until it rosts upon the house's neck, and the faithful animal crowds a bit nearer. Both are awed by the broad expanse. The mighty grandour of Nature steals in upon the man's soul, undit seems to pass like an electric current to the horse. He rases his head, ills nostriks expand. His eyes grow clearer and larger. Sarely he must see the picture spread out before him there, and something of its beauty must be felt.

See that: The man's hand goes up to shade his eyes. He to knowing straight to the west. He stands like a rock, and his eyes are us keen as an ougle's. The horse is looking in the same direction, ears pricked forward, lips quivering and every muscle in his legs the same direction, ears pricked forward, tips quivering and every muscle in his legs tightened up as if for a race. What is it? A flutter on the surface of the prairie caught the man's eye for an instant and then disappeared. It was two miles away. It was only a trifle; but on that trifle depends his life. A shipwrecked sadior catches his breath at sight of every white cloud creeping above the water line. The hunter of the prairie feels his heart pound at the flutter of a bird's wing—the bark of a coyote—the hoot of an why—the bank of a coyote—the hoot of an owt—at sight of a hoof-print or a broken bush. These may mean nothing, or they may mean an ambush—a race for life—capture and torture.

The level-seeming prairie is broken two miles away by a dry ravine deeper than a mark-height. This curves and bends and leads on four miles. Scrambling out of its depths, and each one sounding his war-whoop as he mounts his pany, are a score of Indians.

For two days, the limiter had swept the norizon in vain. He was alone on the great seem. Night had been tranquit and full of sound sloop. Here, now, rising like spectres from the earth before him, is a band of blood-thirsty demons raying for his life. The sight stans him for a few seconds. Then, with a growl of chagrin and defiance, he discould be said to see the said of the standard of the said of the sa rifle, and while yet the Indiana are a and a balf away, he mounts and heads for

A race for life has begun.

The hunter's horse strikes into a long, steady gailop, which would keep him along-side of a train of cars. There is a chorus of yells from the redskins as they make the first rush. Then the silence of the prairie is broken only by the thud! thud! of horse feet. The very silence is orninous, and speaks of a grim determination to run the victim down.

Steady, now! The hunter's horse devours Steady, now! The hunter's horse devours mile after mile of the green prairie, now at the creat of a swell—now almost hidden in a dip—now for an instant out of sight of those who follow. They gain a little. The hunter plans that they shall. Every yard they gain requires an extra speed that will take ten minutes off the race after high noon. At 10 o'clock they have gained half a mile. Then the pace is even, and neither loss nor

There is something terribly grim in follow ing a man to his death. Not a shout—not a call—not a rifle-shot. Thud! thud! thud! over level and ridge and always to the east. The sim mounts higher and higher, and now and then the hunter glances back with a faint hope that the pursuit has been abandoned. No! He might as well expect a wolf to quit the pursuit of a wounded deer leaving its life-blood to stain the grass at every rod.

It is high moon. The pursuit began over sixty miles away, but the breeze brings to the hunter's earsthat same monatony of hoof bests, and he glances hick to see that same dark line strong out at his heels. It has become a question of ondurance. If he can the them out he will os-enje. He shah his tooth anew, reaches forward to cares lib home---

He is down; A burrow caught a foot as the horse sped onward and mun and animal roll to the ground. The race is finished. The poor heast whinnies an apology for his fall as he flounders about with a broken log, and the exultant shouts of the redskins hardly reach the hunter's ears before he is down a longside the crippled horse and his rifle anned at the approaching for

It is another bright, peaceful day. Here are the same pure air, the same blue sky, the same panorama of grass and flowers and dinds outlined mountains. A band of hunters are crossing the prairie at a steady gallop, instead of a single man rising for his life. A vulture rises up with a house a result—a second—a third, and the odor of decay reaches the nostrils of riders and of decay reaches the nostrik of riders and horses. The band halts, rides to the left, and presently all look down upon a night which tells its own story. The swolken carcass of a houser—trampled grass—spots of blood—broken arrows—the earth uptom by hoofs.

One with stouter heart than the rest discounts and rules up. a doesn flattened hulmounts and picks up a doesn flattened bul-lets and a soure of arrows. Then he circles round the spot and gathers up the empty shells thrown out by the hunter's Winchester. Bullets, arrows and shells are deposited in a beap by the corps, and the man points out one—three—five—seven spots on the prairie where the trampled grass and stains of blood show the fall of horse or man. Then in a voice in which sorrow and pride were mingled he whispers:

"Poor Tom! But he died game!"

A MUSICAL Wonder is exhibited in London. It is called the canina. The notes are produced by dogs, twelve of whom are seated in a row inside a long box. Keys on the outer board communicate with wires, which touch each animal's head, and when the performer strikes the ivory, and the contact warns the dog, s whine, a yell, a bark, or a base growl is the response. The harmony is defective, but the laborious training has given the strange orchestra a moderately tuneful facility.

When Senator Pendleton fathered the civil service bill he took eggs to a falling market. Ohio Democrats are standing on their heads in his egg basket, and even threatening to slaughter the hens that laid the heretical anti-Democratic fruit. The word has gone out that either Penlleton or civil service must go.

Tun danger to the corn crop by the late frosts turns out to be very much less than was at first reported. In this region of country, the great corn belt of the Mississippi Valley, the crop was not injured in the slightest, and farther north the damage was comparatively light. The prospect now is good for bright, warm weather, and with a couple of weeks of sunshine most of the corn will be practically out of danger. Some of the newspapers are ex-

Gulf coast and Ohle valley and beyond the Mississippi to the cress of the divide between that river and the Missouri. Between the Ohio river and the Lakouthe distribution of rain has been unequal. In a few places it was in careas, while a deficiency is generally re-ported. The crop is nearly everywhere lute, requiring one to two weeks longer this season than usual to mature. Where Kanest and Missouri seed was planted crop is still later, causing much appre-hension as to ripeuing. While the planting was inte and the early season too wet and a drouth following, the average temperature of the summer has been low, making the full yield impossible. Telegraphic communication with the State agents up to 8 o'clock yesterday afternoon shows THE REVEUE FROMTS

There is also some injury in New York and Pennsyl-vania. While the demage can not yet be clearly determined, it is certain that the frosts have already reduced the general average below 80, though much of the heaviest corn of the West is beyond serious injury. The condition of the wheat where harvested, as reported in these returns, averages 83, which indicates a product of 17 per cent. less than the yield of last year, or for an advance in wages. They went in a a loss of $6,000,000 bushels. The crop of oats will be large, the average being 99. > trowded for Time. CENTERTOWN, Mo., Sept. 12.-A gentleman of undoubted versalty, and one conversant with the facts, furnished a correscourrence at the county poor farm, near liston, this (Cole) county. It is of a character to unit forth the condemnation of every one. The induman practices were on the order of the fumous Tewksbury scandal, and reflect great discredit on the county officers, especially on those whose duty it is to care for the imbecile. The slieged story is as follows: It was announced throughout the neighborhood that a ball would be preparations had been made, but, contrary o the desire of the management, one of and brickmason of Jefferson City, died in the morning before the bail. It was learned that this would be an impediment to the soirce should it become known that a corpse lay on the premises, so it was deemed ex-pedient to bustle him into a rude box, thence into the ground without further ceromony, and before he was cold. Al' hinderances were then thought to he allayed, but late in the afternoon mother inmate died. There being no time even for the kind of burish adopted in the other case, the lastmentioned corpse was bundled up in the corner of an old out-building in the dark, and without a guard, while the ball pro-ceeded. The usual number of roughs gathered, and after a regular backwoods hondown was held in the presence of the unfortunate semi-deranged and feeble inhall to supply them with water when she was suddenly knocked down. > Hunting for a Hidden Treasure Down on one of C. H. Moore's farms near Salt Creek bridge, on the main line of the Illinois Central railroad, says the Bloomington Pantagraph, is a big hole in the ground dug by a reputed spiritualist from Mason county, who was in been buried by Spanish pirates some one hundred years ago. For a long time the fellow labored zealously in prosecuting his search for the shining shekels, but all in vain. He couldn't strike the right lead, and gave up in despair. The In> dian's spirit which was guiding him in the work became wrathy at the impudence of the non-believers who were esgerly watching events, and would not direct the fellow in his underground explorations. To make a long story short a number of other fellows have now camped there and are engaged in limiting for the hidden treasure, and propose to find it if they have to scoop the entire hill away.

AGRATEPUL PATIENT.

ARCOLA, HI., October 24, 1881.

Mus Dir. Kerke-Kind Friend. I can truly say my wife is enjoying before bealth than for ten years. Having suffered with kidney distense inearly twenty years, being prenounced imbotos, growing worse all the line, her general health being affected, and having the worst tenule trouble, at times suffering pain which was worse than death; and for by years she had been doctoring with the bast of physicians whout seeing any relief; but I dis not expect any change in so shorth treatment, for I knew the discuss was a chronic trouble, and she had doctored for ten years with other physicians without relief, and, to be just, I must give Mrs. Dr. Keek a fair trial. But disping the eighth wook the improvement samplement. My though said it would not has, and the createbeword that the improvement continues, and she tests comparatively well, sithough I expect it to take time to get a permanent curre, for a discuss of twenty years standing carnet be curred in a month or two. I even expect there will be days when she will feel hadly, but so far there has not been any return of the discuss. I can say that I feel thankful to Almighy God for making Mrs Dr. Keck the finding this long, for she was so rapidly growing worse. I most heartly recommend Mrs. Dr. Keck to the affilicted, and will answer all setters of highly.
